#MYCPOSTORY

MRS. TUCKER'S STORY

I've taught in urban education for 15 years. Many of my students are high-needs. The emotional and social needs that they have, and the things they face every day, are so unlike the students I worked with before and what I was used to.

It's hard. Some days I feel like giving up. But I can help them when they're in my classroom. I can love them when they're in my classroom. And I know that I need to stay. I'm where I need to be, loving these kids.

Being a Christian in a public school setting isn't the easiest place to be, but the support and love I feel from the people at Connection Pointe make the job so much easier. It's what gives me strength, knowing there's a church body behind me, praying for me and praying for my students.

I've never been a part of anything like this before ... where a church wants to partner with a school, help and be so involved in the kids' lives. For me, that makes all the difference in the world. It keeps me going.
